Applied Linguistics in the Spanish-Speaking World: Mapping Out the Road

Manel Lacorte
Associate Professor
Department of Spanish and Portuguese

March 14, 3:30-5:00 PM
2120 Francis Scott Key
(Merrill Room)

This talk reflects on the nature and internal cohesion of Hispanic applied linguistics based on a review of literature published in Spanish and English, and an analysis of mission statements, program requirements, and course offerings in a sample of universities in Spanish-speaking countries.

Manel Lacorte (B.A., University of Barcelona, M.A., University of Illinois at Chicago, Ph.D., University of Edinburgh, Scotland) is Associate Professor of Spanish Applied Linguistics, Director of the Spanish Language Program, and co-Director of the new MA in Hispanic Applied Linguistics at the School of Languages, Literatures and Cultures.
